International Youth Day

Sustainability: Our Challenge. Our Future.

The United Nations General Assembly declared August 12 “International Youth Day” welcoming the mobilization of youth globally around a common issue and theme annually.

This International Youth Day 2009, as the world continues to feel the impact of the economic crisis, youth respond for looking for solutions under the theme “Sustainability: Our Challenge. Our Future”.

The biggest challenge of this generation may also be the greatest opportunity for economic growth, and good job creation. Economic and job creation policies must address all the indicators of a good quality of life – the economy, jobs, equality and the employment.

As global youth mobilize, we must ensure that everything possible is done to reduce global emissions to a science – based level. There is also a need to promote the ongoing growth of developing countries to secure a good quality of life for all at global level in a less carbon intensive way.

It is often said that young people are our future. They are our present too. It is today , and not tomorrow, that we must invest in young people and include them in solving the great challenges of our times. Today, more than a billion and a half people are between the ages of 10 and 25 – the largest – ever youth generation – and they are approaching adulthood in a world their elders could not have imagined. The world has been hit by the food, financial and climate crisis and many young people are eager to help steer our world into greater balance.

To ensure their full participation, we must invest in their health, education and leadership. This is especially true for adolescent girls, many of whom face discrimination, and are denied opportunities and life choices. Today, more than half a billion adolescent girls live in the developing world and they represent a huge untapped potential. If educated, healthy and empowered, they can build a better life for themselves, and their families and nations.

Now is the time to make greater investments in young people , especially adolescent girls, so they can reach their full potential. Investing in young people today is an investment in a sustainable future.

MY BABY RACER

The YAMAHA YZF R15,This bike is perhaps one of the best looking bikes in India. The design has been cloned from the Yamaha YZF R1. Except for a few minor changes, it is almost R1 when looked from a distance. The dual head lamps,the rear view mirrors, shape of the tank,seating position all add up to a ‘WOW’ effect. This bike is definitely a head turner wherever you go. To add to its looks,Yamaha did not include the center stand. This is the only bike in India in its class, which does not have a center stand. The handle bars are curved as it is in high-end sports bikes and adds to the good sitting posture. Well, the rear part looks a bit disappointing because compared to the front the rear looks too small and does not fit in with the whole bike’s look. I wished Yamaha would provide some big manly tires, yet don't be disappointed by those thin tires, those tires perform well and allow you to throw the bike into a corner.

The bike vibrates a lot and it is not smooth initially, but the engine sound really becomes nice and the bike becomes very smooth after riding 3000 kms.And the most important thing about this bike is that the bike has a great acceleration in lower speeds. I can boldly say that ‘SIZE(CC) DOESN’T MATTER’. No other bike in its class (even the p220) can match up against the R15 in a street fight.

The bike has a fuel efficiency of 40 kmpl in cities and 45 kmpl in highways.From safety point of view, the bike performs great. The rear disc brakes does make a difference. It wouldn’t be long before all the high end bikes in India comes with compulsory rear disc brakes. The bike comes with mono suspension as in the Unicorn and gives better stability.

Overall, there is no bike like R15 in its class in india, it looks cool,is damn fast,and sticks to the road no matter what.. Also the service network of yamaha is good.so, its a good buy overall.
Overall Rating: 4.5/5
Pros: Great looks, 6 speed gear
Cons: Low displacement, Thin tires.
